

“I feel like people who don't talk to themselves in their brain are weird and boring.”
-Campbelle Searcy

I talk to myself, so does the person on my left and my right. Not out loud of course, but in our heads. Sometimes these conversations can be as random as “I am the best person in the world” all the way to “I am the trashiest person in the world.” My piece is focused around the idea of inner dialogue and the effect it has on development and more specifically negative inner dialogue.

I portray this idea using mixed media such as design, videography, and music. This piece draws upon the interaction between video and music to show how although self love is preached about it's hard to love yourself when you don't treat yourself with love. The dress portrays how development and growth get affected and halted during times of negativity.

STILL UNDER DEVELOPMENT

Avery S.

Larchmont, New York